Veteran's trust wounded by group's leadership

It has been reported recently what many of us who are veterans have known for years. The Wounded Warrior Project is a self-serving, money grabbing, uncaring, group.

They have helped a few veterans, but not nearly as well as they have helped themselves.

The WWP board has fired the leadership (that would be the two people the board hired and were supposed to oversee) as if that would fix the deception.

The fact is that the board either knew, or should have known, about the lavish spending on themselves rather than veterans. Board members were probably there at all those fancy shindigs and enjoyed the fruits of the donations of innocent, patriotic people who were duped into thinking they were doing good for our troops.

There are two possible responses:

1. Previous contributors to the WWP should be given their money back. Every penny.

2. The board chair has gone public asking for continued support. Don't buy it. Don't buy him. Don't buy in.

There are many ways to support veterans. The Wounded Warrior Project is not one of them.
